Looking for ERIC on the Educator's Reference Desk?

In 1993, the Information Institute of Syracuse, operators of the widely acclaimed AskERIC service, was first in the world to place a search interface to ERIC on the Internet. Searching ERIC on the AskERIC website quickly became one of the most popular ways for educators and researchers to search for educational information. When the United States Department of Education closed all ERIC Clearinghouses and AskERIC on December 31, 2003 and started to reorganize ERIC, the Information Institute of Syracuse moved its familiar ERIC search engine to the Educator's Reference Desk as a service to our loyal friends.

Our search engine pointed users to the Educational Document Reproduction Service (EDRS) and to e-subscribe for microfiche, paper or electronic copies of the documents abstracted in ERIC. On September 30, 2004, EDRS was closed by the United States Department of Education. This rendered our search interface a less complete option for searching and obtaining ERIC material.

The United States Department of Education operates an ERIC database containing more than one million records going back to 1966. More than 100,000 non-journal documents (issued 1993-2004), are available in full-text at no cost.

Educator's Reference Desk users may wish to search ERIC* at the U.S. Department of Education's ERIC website:

*The Educators Reference Desk is not affiliated with or funded by the ERIC program or the United States Department of Education. All questions concerning ERIC should be addressed directly to the ERIC program at 1-800-LET-ERIC.

Abstract: With more than half of children with disabilities being educated in the general education classroom, and with federal education law requiring improved learning outcomes for these students, preparing general education teachers to work effectively with all students is critical. This report on teacher certification requirements in the nine Northeast and Islands Region jurisdictions finds that eight of them require some coursework in teaching students with disabilities for initial licensure of general education teachers. It finds commonalities and differences both in how jurisdictions require general education teacher candidates to develop knowledge in special education and in the specific knowledge and skills required as part of teacher preparation. The study was requested by education policymakers and practitioners in the Northeast and Islands Region, who expressed interest in learning more about teacher preparation requirements for initial licensure of general education teachers that prepare educators to teach students with disabilities. Specifically, education officials from Maine and Puerto Rico requested information on current policies and pending changes to requirements, along with more detail on the specific content or program of study required by state education agencies. Appendices include: (1) Methodology; (2) Consent Form to Accompany Interview Protocol; (3) Expanded Tables of Publicly Available Documents from Northeast and Islands Region State Education Agency Web Sites; (4) State Education Agency Web Site Document Review Summary Sheet; (5) Interview Summary Sheet; (6) Interstate New Teacher Assessment and Support Consortium Model Standards for Licensing General and Special Education Teachers of Students with Disabilities (2001); (7) Jurisdiction Summaries of Requirements for Preparing General Education Teachers To Teach Students With Disabilities In General Education Classrooms; and (8) Knowledge and Skills in Special Education Recommended for General Education Teachers, by Jurisdiction. (Contains 3 boxes, 8 tables, and 7 notes.) [This report was prepared for the Institute of Education Sciences (IES) by Regional Educational Laboratory Northeast and Islands administered by Education Development Center, Inc.]
